INTRODUCTION.

War Department Library,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1897.

The photographs and photographic negatives enumerated in this Finding List were transferred to the War Department Library under Paragraph III of Orders of the Secretary of War, dated May 15, 1894, as follows:

> The following transfers are hereby directed: * * * (a) All libraries or parts of libraries, or collections of photographs in the State, War, and Navy Building, of any Bureau of the War Department not used in the administrative work thereof, to the War Department Library.

These photographs may all be said to relate to the war for the Union, although some few pertain to what is known as the "Reconstruction Period." By far the greater number, and by all means the most important, of these negatives are those generally known as the Brady War Photographs, which reproduce scenes and portraits connected with the war for the Union. From their value, importance, and present condition, a brief post-bellum history of these negatives is most appropriate.

It appears that on January 29, 1866, the Council of the National Academy of Design, D. Huntington, president, adopted a resolution reciting the value of this collection as a reliable authority for art and as illustrative of American history. They strongly commended the proposal to place the collection permanently in the keeping of the New York Historical Society.

Relative to the proposition of its owner, Mr. Mathew B. Brady, to exhibit the collection temporarily in the galleries of the New York Historical Society, Lieut. Gen. U. S. Grant, in a letter dated February 3, 1866, spoke of it as a "collection of photographic views of battlefields," etc., "taken on the spot, while the occurrences represented were taking place," and adds, "I knew when many of these representations were being taken, and have in my possession most of them, and I can say that the scenes are not only spirited and correct, but also well chosen. The collection will be valuable to the student and artist of the present generation; but how much more valuable it will be to future generations!"

Brady, in his descriptive circular, spoke of the collection as then embracing the results of his labors of the previous twenty-five years, including, first, portraits of many distinguished men who figured in the early years of the present century; second, likenesses of all prominent actors in the war with Mexico; third, portraits of eminent men and women of the whole country; fourth, battlefields of the rebellion and its memorable localities, with groups and likenesses of the prominent actors.

In 1871 the Joint Committee on the Library, through Mr. Peters, of the House, made a report (41 C., 3 S., H. R., Rept. No. 46), dated March 3, 1871, looking to the purchase of some two thousand portraits from Mr. Brady, which was called "A national collection of portraits of eminent Americans," but Congress took no final action on the subject.

The first active connection of the Government with the Brady collection appears in the action of Secretary of War William W. Belknap, who purchased for the War Department in July, 1874 (voucher dated July 31), as shown by his letter of August 7 to the Adjutant General, a large number of photographic negatives of war views and pictures of prominent men. The purchase was made from the Provost Fund (moneys accumulated by provost marshals and turned in to the adjutant general at the close of the war) at an expense of $2,840. This purchase was made at a public auction, the collection being sold for nonpayment of storage, and it embraced only three-fourths of Brady's entire collection, many important negatives being wanting.

As far as the records show, there was no list of the negatives made either at the time of the purchase or for many subsequent years; the original voucher is silent as to the number of said negatives, it reading, "For photograph negatives of battlefields, war views, and other views, and apparatus." A doubt was suggested as to the validity of the title of the United States to the negatives thus acquired, and Congress was appealed to.

On motion of Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, member from Massachusetts, a paragraph was inserted in the Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill (act approved March 3, 1875), reading, "To enable the Secretary of War to acquire a full and perfect title to the Brady collection of photographs of the war, and to secure and purchase the remainder now in possession of the artist, $25,000."

In connection with this amendment, General Butler said: "The title under which the Secretary of War purchased the part already obtained was acquired from the forfeiture for nonpayment of the storage. It is very doubtful whether the Secretary of War has a valid title."

Gen. James G. Garfield joined Butler in the statement that the commercial value of the entire collection was $150,000, and Garfield stated that the part bought by the United States for $2,500 covered three-fourths of the collection (Cong. Rec., Mar. 3, 1875, p. 2250).

The sum of twenty-five thousand dollars thus appropriated was paid April 15, 1875, the voucher reading "For the Brady collection of photographs of the war and for a conveyance of a full and perfect title to the same." It would appear from Brady's power of attorney of March 15, 1875, that the title was thus given for "photographic negative plates, views, pictures, printing frames, and other photographic apparatus, books, and property, including both those recently delivered at the War Department to the Secretary of War and inspected by him, and those previously procured by the said Secretary of War in New York and now in the possession of the United States, and together comprising the Brady collection of photographs mentioned and referred to in the act of Congress."

There is no intimation as to the number of negatives "recently delivered at the War Department to the Secretary of War and inspected by him," nor of the number "previously procured by the said Secretary of War in New York."

The records do not show in detail into whose hands the negatives came originally, and information as to the exact action of the War Department in caring for the negatives and making reproductions therefrom is likewise indefinite. As might be expected, the collection suffered considerably from unavoidable breakage of negatives and from other causes.

In 1875 a decision was made by the Second Comptroller on an application of C. W. Bernard, Acting Chief Clerk of the War Department, October 15, 1875, asking whether these photographs were not of such a character as to be called records within the meaning of the act authorizing the preparation for publication of the official records of the war, and whether a number of the proof copies of said pictures could not be made at the charge of the appropriation for the publication of the official records of the war. The Second Comptroller, under date of August 16, 1875, informed the War Department that no objections would be interposed at the Treasury to making payments for printing such views out of the appropriation for the publication of the official records of the war. The Comptroller said:

> The photographic views of the war, showing battlefields, military divisions, fortifications, etc., are among the most authentic and valuable records of the rebellion. The preservation of these interesting records of the war is too important to be intrusted to glass plates, so easily destroyed by accident or design, and no more effective means than printing can be devised to save them from destruction.

From different sources, verbal and unofficial, it is learned that quite a number of the negatives were broken through careless handling of employees of the War Department during the period (1875–1879) in which prints were freely made. Finally the negatives were transferred to the War Records Office and placed under the charge of Col. R. N. Scott.

In 1882, Mr. E. Bierstadt, calling attention to the fact that "the breakableness of the glass and the fugitive character of photographic chemicals will in a short time obliterate all traces of the scenes these negatives represent," stated that unless they were reproduced in some permanent form they would soon be lost. On his representations fifty-two negatives were sent to him, of which six were reproduced by a photo-mechanical process, and an offer was made to make similar reproductions at an expense of seventy-five dollars per thousand, a price that was clearly prohibitive of any extended action by the War Department.

In March, 1884, the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, Massachusetts Commandery, applied for authority to make prints of the Brady collection of photographs, under the joint supervision of Gen. Albert Ordway, on the part of the Loyal Legion, and Col. R. N. Scott then in charge of the War Records Office. Permission was accorded by Secretary of War Robert Lincoln, with the proviso that one copy of each print should be delivered to the War Records Office for preservation. Subsequent to the reproduction of photographs by the Massachusetts Commandery of the Loyal Legion, the War Department took in 1885 its first steps, on the recommendation of Mr. Samuel Hodgkins, it is said, to secure a complete set of photographs from this collection, which for nine years had remained comparatively neglected in its possession.

This decision to obtain prints of all remaining negatives was both timely and wise, but through ordinary breakage, lax supervision, and disregard of orders its execution, unfortunately, entailed a loss of nearly three hundred negatives. It appears from the detailed report that these negatives were numbered, for the first time apparently since they had come into the hands of the Department, but the plates were returned in such condition that the exact loss can not be stated. Of the 5,995 negatives, 262 were broken and 21 or more lost.

In June, 1886, an effort was made to supplement the Brady collection by the sale to the United States of what is known as the Rand-Ordway collection of war photographs, consisting of about 6,000 negatives, of which 4,000 had been offered the Government in 1884 (see 48 C., 2 S., Sen. Mis. Doc. 19). The proposition was unfavorably viewed by the Secretary of War.

On February 15, 1888, Prof. S. P. Langley, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, stated that the National Museum was collecting a series of photographs of representative Americans, and asked that authority be granted to procure a set of such photographs, to which request the War Department gave a favorable answer, but it does not appear that Professor Langley availed himself of the permission. From time to time the privilege of printing photographs from the negatives has been accorded war veterans, Grand Army posts, etc.

It was impossible that such use of the negatives, which necessarily passed for a time beyond the control of the War Department, could result otherwise than in the destruction of a certain percentage of the plates through accidental breakages, or that they should receive other irreparable injuries. As soon as the collection passed under the control of the War Department Library the policy of loaning the negatives was carefully considered by the Secretary of War. It was evident that these invaluable negatives were gradually disappearing, and, in order to insure their preservation, it was ordered that thereafter negatives should not be loaned to private parties for commercial exploitation or to subserve private interests in any manner.

In exceptional cases permission is yet accorded for the reproduction of selected photographs under rigid restrictions tending to secure the safety of the negatives. This privilege is granted as a proper concession to surviving relatives of individuals whose portraits have thus been preserved, and in cases where such action would be in the public interests, as for use by biographers, painters, and sculptors, or by bureaus of the National and State governments.

This collection cost the United States originally the sum of $27,840, and it is a matter of general regret that these invaluable reproductions of scenes and faces connected with the late civil conflict should remain inaccessible to the general public. The features of most of the prominent actors connected with the war for the Union have been preserved in these negatives, where also are portrayed certain physical aspects of the war that are of interest and of historic value. Certain artistic processes now lend themselves to suitable reproductions of these photographs, which could thus be given a permanency impossible for the deteriorating negatives, at an expense which a few years since would have appeared impossibly small.

It is hoped that recommendations already made by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army may, at an appropriate time, receive the approval of the War Department, and that Congress may authorize the reproduction of the most valuable and important photographs. Such would not exceed seven hundred and fifty in number, and they could appropriately form a volume of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, where would thus be preserved for all time these invaluable graphic representations of the greatest of American, if not of all, wars.

There have also been discovered one hundred and twenty-five transparencies made from the Brady war negatives when they were in excellent condition. These transparencies fortunately preserve for the War Department quite a number of war views which are missing from the present collection of negatives.

In addition to the Brady collection, there are also on file in this library many other photographs of individuals or scenes relating to the war for the Union, which were made under the supervision of officers of the Corps of Engineers and of the Quartermaster's Department, or which have come into the possession of the War Department through the courtesy of private parties.

The most important of these were made under the supervision of Gen. (then Captain) O. M. Poe, Corps of Engineers, by Mr. George M. Barnard in 1864–65. They relate especially to the Union and Confederate fortifications in and around Atlanta, Ga., and to the surroundings of Charleston, S. C., in 1865. Some of these views were reproduced, with others unfortunately not in the possession of the War Department, in a publication entitled "Photographic Views of Sherman's Campaign," printed in New York shortly after the war. In this publication, the prints are photographed, sixty-one in number. The War Department collection contains sixty-four of the Barnard photographs.

In 1865, under the direction of Gen. Richard Delafield, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, a series of views were taken by Mr. S. R. Seibert, showing existing conditions of the more important points and defenses of Charleston, S. C. There are sixty-three of these photographs, of which forty are known to have been taken by Seibert, the balance being attributed to him, although possibly some of them may have been made by Barnard.

The Library is in possession of no intimation as to when, where, or by whom were taken the photographs pertaining to the operations of the Quartermaster's Department during the war. The collection, it is believed, was made by Q. M. Gen. M. C. Meigs. They number ten hundred and seventy-seven photographs, among which are ninety-four of transports owned or chartered by the War Department. The other views are generally of storehouses of the Quartermaster's or Subsistence Department, or of barracks or quarters occupied by civil employees. There is, however, a very valuable collection of photographs without negatives relating to the United States Railway Department, which played such an important part in the successful prosecution of the greatest campaigns of the war. They illustrate methods of construction, operation, and destruction as practiced by the Railway Department, including original devices, then for the first time practiced, for transporting cars and trains by barges.

The collection of private photographs consists in general of portraits and views presented by individuals to the War Department. Occasionally some of them relate to important phases of the war, the most valuable being a series of views of Chattanooga and its surroundings, made during the war, and which the War Department has been able to reproduce through the courtesy of Gen. H. V. Boynton and Capt. W. C. Margedant.

There are now on hand in the War Department Library separate photographs relating to the war for the Union, enumerated and classified according to size ("A," being less than 6 by 8 inches; "B," being from 6 by 8 to 8 by 10 inches; and "C," larger than 8 by 10 inches), as follows:

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHS.

Each photograph has its card number followed by its negative number. Photographs without negatives bear a single number only—their card numbers. A number inclosed in parentheses indicates that the negative is broken. Its size is shown as follows: "A" indicates less than 6 by 8 inches; "B" from 6 by 8 to 8 by 10 inches; "C," larger. Missing negatives are so indicated.
